

The Carmel Valley PROSPECTOR!

July-August 2012 Volume 52, Numbers 7 & 8

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE- JULY:

Hi all.....I am so sorry I missed the picnic! I was prepared to come and an unexpected family issue came up. By the time I actually got to the park....thought I could at least say 'hi' and help clean up...Jay was locking the gate and everyone was gone! I am anxious to hear about it....I'll bet the food was great and I hope you all went home with some new treasures! I look forward to some pics in the Prospector!

My grandkids from Colorado came this past Tues. I took them to Bean Creek Rd. in Scotts Valley and they collected a lot of fossil sand dollars! The site is better suited to very small groups because it is a slippery, sandy slope and the bottom is the road. It would be a great family outing and I have a map for anyone interested.

I showed my grandkids....12 and 14....how to wire wrap using the Francos' technique and they have been wrapping anything I can find for them! My grandson loves bats and believe it or not, he turned an obsidian arrowhead into a bat! Don't know how long the wire wings will hold up but I am amazed at their creativity. My granddaughter has wrapped a large ruby crystal, a triangular ruby zoesite cab, a quartz crystal and a round, polished stone that I was sure she wouldn't be able to do but it turned out great! It looks like a dark blue gumball and she wrapped it so cute! I'll get pictures but will need Cynthia Franco's help to get out of my camera....I know "it's soooo easy" you are all saying, but I can't seem to figure out how to get them to a place where I can find them again! And then get them to Rich for the Prospector!
AARRRGGGGGHHHHH

Our next regular meeting will be Friday July 13, 2012.

Susie Harlow, President

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE- AUGUST:

Hi Everyone, first a big thank you to all who carried on last month....I literally had a last minute family crisis.....my Pebble Pup program was in a box and ready to go into the car and the phone rang as I was ready to walk out the door! My Vice President Margaret ran the board meeting and I missed Jimmy's much anticipated program. Just goes to show that YOU are really the ones that make the club work....THANK YOU!!

I'm looking forward to our August program presented by Dick Friesen with follow-up workshops on Saturday and Sunday at the Biewers.

Our September program will be presented by Ed Clifton with a follow-up walk, talk and surprise activity at Pt. Lobos the next day.

The October program will be presented by the Francos doing another wire wrapping activity.....possible Christmas gifts?! After our last wire wrapping session with them, I saw some terrific pieces done by so many of you, even the pebble pups did some pretty amazing wire wraps! Christine showed us the wire wrap mobile she was fashioning.... bring samples of your projects which may spark the imaginations of others!

Wow...our year is almost up! I'm looking forward to enjoying these last few programs with you all!

See you at our next meeting, Friday, August 10, at the museum!

And from President Susie...

I took my two of my grandkids to the fossil sand dollar site on Bean Creek Rd. in Scotts Valley. The pickens are slim at the bottom of the hill and it is a challenge to climb up to where there are still many dollars to find because it is literally a sand dune.

Then the next week, several more grandkids came and I showed them the basics of wire wrapping thinking it would hold their attention for about 15 minutes but they sat at the table for about 2 hours wrapping away! They developed their own techniques and one grandson who loves bats, made a bat out of a small arrowhead! I just gave them a drawer of miscellaneous crystals, cabs, sharks teeth, arrowheads and tumbled rocks and they had a blast.

I'm looking forward to another wire wrapping session at a future meeting! Thanks, Susie

TRIP REPORTS...

From Jim Hamilton:

Hi Rich, on June 19th, Roslyn, Deirdre and I went to the San Diego Zoo with friends, who live down there. It was a treat to visit one of the most famous zoos in the world with its open enclosures for most animals and beautiful foliage. We saw most of the animals, which meant we did a fair bit of walking up and down the trails of the zoo. Roslyn did quite a bit of walking for a soon to be 7-year old, and sometimes enjoyed being towed (pulled) uphill. The only lines were to see the Panda and get on the aerial tram, both of which were worth the wait. We saw a baby Giraffe that was less than two weeks old, and witnessed the strangest gargling behavior by one of the adult Giraffes.

...and in the stretch, it was neck-and-neck...

Last October, we were visiting friends, who live in Scotts Valley about a mile from the sand dollar fossil spot. While our friends live off of Bean Creek and the spot is literally down the street, we had not previously taken the time to go there. We brought a few simple tools from their garage, and walked up the sandy embankment. Most of the sand dollars were too delicate and broke before we could remove them. The fossils that seemed to hold together better were not easy to get to, and made the fossil hunter exposed to a drop of some consequence, so we left that to Roslyn's older friends. Roslyn wisely opted to employ as much patience as a 6-year old can muster rather than bravado. While not a must for girls, Roslyn felt that a cheerleader's outfit was perfect for fossil hunting in the afternoon sun. We do however recommend kitty cat boots to keep the sand from getting to your feet, pink being the appropriate color. - Jim

Our Oregon Trip, August-July 2012 by Rich & Martha Saylor

Recently, we took a road trip to Oregon, traveling up 101 and highway 1 to Cave Junction, having stopped over for the night in Eureka before going into Oregon. Our next stop was at Oregon Caves National Monument, near Cave Junction in southern Oregon. The monument is about 20 miles up a valley and then up a very twisty road onto the mountain, fairly high up! No matter, the entire road is forested, and only occasionally does one have a view thru the trees of the winding road, far below! Guests stay at a timbered multistoried lodge, since converted into a hotel. The rooms are quite small, but barred gates and darted around; even if you stand in their way, they don't run into you.

Thru the redwoods

Downtown Eureka

The tour cost $6 and took over an hour. It required some agility and a lack of fear of tight/dark spaces and heights. The tours run frequently, and you're questioned about prior cave visits to protect the bats from imported fungal disease from previous cave visits. There were several steel grate treads ladders/stairs. The cave only had one large chamber. There were "soda straw" and some joined stalagmites and stalactites. The outside air temperature was in the low 80's; inside the cave it was in the low 50's, though the exercise kept me from needing all the adequate, considering that the facility was built the better part of a century ago.

The caves were formed in a "marble mountain", eroded by slightly corrosive soda water. It was discovered by a hunter whose dog was chased by a bear. The hunter used up his matches and had to listen to the running water to find his way out, the dog having found his own way. In the afternoons, a cold draft comes from the cave entry. At sunset, we watched as bats emerged thru the layers I started with. Photos were permitted, the tour was led by a volunteer working on a degree in geology. The striping of the marble was apparent on some of the almost polished stair treads.

The tour starts near the information center which has trails that visit old growth forests, etc. It has an escape route about half way thru, and ends up on the mountain on a trail that switchbacks down to the start. I took an extra loop hike on the side of the mountain and there were many varieties of wild flowers sprinkled in the shade of the trees and rocks. Also, nice views of the coastal mountains, but only a (downward) view of the forest from the hotel. It's worth adding that the hotel has a restaurant and separate breakfast café; prices are about what you'd expect at such a facility, food's acceptable.

At the rhodonite mine with our host, John

We visited one of the rhodonite mines owned by the Roxy Ann Gem group. John Hudick was our gracious host and guide. Starting from Grants Pass, it took easily half a day. It was on the road to the Oregon Caves, and required a hike of about a half mile up the side of a hill, which unfortunately Rich was unable to climb due to his knees. The rock—that is, the “mine”—is part of an outcropping, and it takes wedges, etc. to get a piece off of it. Elspeth and I picked up scraps from prior groups, and John used a sledge hammer to bust off a large chunk. It's a real pretty, fairly bright, pink, crystalline looking rock. Our big chunk oxidized or something, because by the time we got home it looked slightly more pale than at the mine. We packed out as much as we chose to carry. Many thanks, John! Later, I bought an oval shaped piece at the Crystal Rock Museum in Central Point. John had warned us to not store it outside in the weather or it might turn black. A rock shop, Crystal Kaleidoscope, to the north of Cave Junction that had worked and tumbled pieces of it for sale. There was another

The 4th of July in Ashland, Oregon

rock shop in Cave Junction that we did not visit due to time constraints. On a side road were some black chunks of serpentine that John showed us; we collected a small bagful; they're soft enough for "easy" carving.

The Crystal Rock Museum in Central Point - well worth a visit, featuring a very large collection- is a large air-conditioned building, with many rooms exhibiting everything from arrowheads and large mineral specimens to Native American mortars, etc. Outside in the parking lot was a cluster of petrified wood log pieces and a slab of impression clam fossils. It easily takes at least an hour to see, and costs $4 each. The lobby is a consignment rock store with specimens displayed. On one wall is a display of identified by species petrified wood cross section slabs. There are a couple of chairs and benches to sit on. There was scrimshaw in one case. The local club has a workroom in the back that is open to members during certain hours. Of course, there was much more to our trip; a few of the more picturesque photos are included, but due to space limitations the main points covered involve those parts of the trip mostly of interest to rockhounds...we hope. Several days were spent in Ashland, taking in 3 plays during the Shakespeare Festival...

Ashland, for a smallish town, has much to offer; besides the three very nice theaters, there are a lot of very nice cafés and restaurants, with a lot of variety in cuisines. We visited the Sisters (3 mountains) and their eponymous town nearby- pretty touristy but what does one expect? Mt. Bachelor is in the same range, easily visible from not only Sisters but Bend, as well! We drove across the Eastern Oregon desert, stopping to check out the Lava Tubes Monument, passing by the fairly close fossil beds monument(s) due to time constraints, but following advice found in Oregon Gem Trails (I think) we looked for- and found- agates and an obsidian nodule in a roadside cut. Very handy! We also followed directions to obsidian outcroppings, but the directions and trails (roads) to the site were not completely clear, nevertheless we found a scattered pile of obsidian flakes... nothing big but most likely leavings from other rockhounds' findings. Or so it appeared! Anyway after following highway 395 into Nevada, we stopped over in Reno to check out the local Basque restaurant downtown, leaving very, very stuffed with enough leftovers for another meal at home! So, if you're not hungry, NEVER go to a Basque restaurant! One last overnight at the local Ramada Inn (quite a view from the 8th floor!) And home the next day... nearly 2100 miles and 12 days later! Fun!
